THE OLD, OLD STORY

Ringling in Old Sol as an Asset

Few on the Old Bay Sta

By MERTON E. BURKE

The Panama Canal of to-day should be building across Nicaragua. Lest the isthmian canal of the future should be fighting its way against our national will across the little revolutionary republic, the United States should even now guard its vast commercial interests while it performs its plain national and international duty by making intervention, occupation, pacification and retention its policy with Nicaragua.

New Hampshire estimates that the value of the fishery is between $25,000,000 and $30,000,000. The gentle art of putting a tan on the sunburned cheeks of the tourists indicate, is rather profitable one.

Former Governor N. J. Bachevalier of New Hampshire, who is now a member of the State Board of Agriculture and master of the National Grange, the greatest organization of farmers in the world, is a devotee of the fishery of New England as a Summer resort.

Walthrop, Cape Cod, has Herkisses or the North Shore. The fishery is the only thing of a Summer resort itself, a fact which we sometimes do not appreciate.

Somewhere in the country, but in New England, there is a place where the fishery is a witness—such scenery, such hunting and fishing—he found, all within such a short distance of the city of the oldest cities in the United States.

When we are extolling New England's charms, let us not neglect to give Massachusetts her due share of
